We Americans tend to take the good things of life for granted. Just as we assume that we will eat well we also assume that we will be free to express ourselves, to keep and use our property, to work when and where we choose and to worship as we please.

But Freedom cannot live unless men are free to speak out whenever liberty is in danger and freedom to speak means little unless the Mt. Empire Woman's Club enjoyed a very lovely luncheon and card party at the home of Mary Griswold in Pine Valley on Wednesday, Oct. 11. The luncheon was prepared by Catherine Hadley, and it consisted of chicken salad, cranberry salad, deviled eggs, pickles, olives, celery, and hot chesse bread, with petits fours for dessert, and coffee. There were five tables of cards, and almost everyone won a door prize. The table prizes were arranged by the players.

Cora Russell from Imperial Dam at the Colorado Rive, and formerly of Morena Village, was the guest of Phoebe Thompson at the above party, and she was also her house guest for a few days at her home in Morena Village. They also attended the Homemaker's Bazaar in Campo on Thursday, as they are both members of that club.

The Mt. Empire Masonic Club held its regular monthly dinner meeting at the Village Inn in Morena on Friday evening, Oct. 13. There were 34 members and guests present.

A Conversational Spanish class will be held at the Mt. Empire High School on Thursday evenings each week at 7:00 p. m. A large attendance is expected.

press is free to speak the words of patriots among the people.

It is significant that censorship is the first step of any would-be oppressor; it is meaningful that there is no free press behind the Iron Curtain; and it is an ominous threat to our liberty that Castro's Cuba has instructed its agents throughout Latin America to destroy the free press.

Perhaps little papers like the ECHO may not seem important in the struggle for men's minds; but of all the channels for free expression small newspapers and magazines are least subject to pressure from vested interests. When the great dailies remain discreetly silent, there is always some little paper that speaks out.

It is the policy of the ECHO to say nothing that will hurt or damage anyone unless an important issue is at stake. Even then your editors seek to use every means to use every means to avoid any negative attitudes or antagonistic ideas.

As we see it more can be accomplished by praise and soft words than by scolding and criticism. When a paper in a small community indulges in destructive criticism it divides the town and creates bitterness that cannot be lived down for many years.

Wise For Her Years!

Little Laura Willett of Los Angeles, Calif., proudly polishes "her" traffic sign, a self-imposed chore she performs every day at an intersection near her home. Ten-year-old Laura feels personally responsible for the stop sign, since it was erected at her request after several minor accidents occurred at the intersection.

Worrying about the accident problem, little Laura drew up her own petition to the Los Angeles authorities, requesting that stop signs be put up on the corner. Laura obtained the signatures of fifty neighbors before she sent the petition to Los Angeles city officials. In a short time, the new signs were put in place. The sign is coated with reflective material that glows in headlight beams and can be seen blocks away by motorists, even on darkest nights. Her daily polishing makes sure the sign always shines brightly.

PUT A COVER ON YOUR BULB BED

One of spring's most appealing sights in the garden is that of bulbs growing up through a cover of colorful annuals. You see it in garden shows every year, and there is no reason that you shouldn't see it outside your own door.

Picture the combination of yellow daffodils poking up through a bed of blue violas, or a mass of red tulips with snowy white alyssum at their feet. These are touches which make an artist of any gardener.

You can plant a bulb bed cover at the same time you plant bulbs, or you can wait a month if you're pressed for time. The California Association of Nurserymen says the only thing to be careful of is that the cover be planted before the bulbs have begun to sprout. Otherwise you might injure the sprouting tops with your trowel.

A flower that seems ideally suited to planting over a bulb bed is the viola, mentioned above in combination with yellow daffodils. We would caution the gardener, however, not to plant yellow violas with yellow daffodils. The lack of contrast would lack appeal.

Use blue or white violas with such daffodils as the giant King Alfred, and use yellow ones with the white Beersheba daffodil or with white tulips, if at all.

THE FIRE SIREN

When you hear the fire siren, be extra careful with your driving. Remember our volunteer firemen will be hurrying to the fire house.

They will not be driving carelessly, but they will be rushing to answer the call. Just as the sound of a siren in the city means--- "caution, pull over" so you as a citizen of the community should be ready to pull over---so that these unpaid lifesavers of yours may obey the call of duty.

The house they save may be your own.

goes well over bulbs is the viola's cousin, the pansy. Pansies in combination with white alyssum make an ideal carpet for bulbs to push up through. We prefer this combination rather than pansies alone because the latter's vivid markings are apt to detract from the bulbs, and this should not be.

The alyssum family has many members which will enhance a bulb planting. Not only the white Rosie O'Day, this year's All A-Carpet of Snow, but the purple Royal Carpet and the new pink merica annual. We'd like to try the latter with the white and pink daffodil, Mrs. R. O. Backhouse for a really striking combination. You'll discover other bulb covers on your own, no doubt. There are many to be found in nurseries, and many's the joy in finding one you like.

Mrs. Raymond Partridge, (Betty) of Alpine Terrace, underwent major surgery last Friday. She is in Heartland Hospital. How about some cards to cheer her up? The address is 203 South Cuyamaca, El Cajon. Or better still go in to see her. The hospital is on the corner of Main. Her room number is 41.

WAR DIARY by BERT FULLER PART ELEVEN

(The surrender of Corregidor) The island which was supposed to be, according to our folks back home, the best fortified place in the Pacific, surrendered to the Japanese at noon while Bill Winters was on the air in San Francisco, broadcasting the news to the world over short wave. He told the Nips in that broadcast to bring on more aircraft and bomb Corregidor—they couldn't take the island. He also said they couldn't hit the island with their bombs, that they were falling along the beaches and the men were well fed on fish killed by their bombs. It was nice of Mr. Winters to park himself in 'Frisco and say that. We wished he was parked in a foxhole on the east beach of Corregidor.

At noon the Stars and Stripes were hauled down on Corregidor and the white flag of surrender was hoisted. The other islands followed. Colonel Foster ordered the white flag raised on Fort Hughes. His order was carried out by Lieutenant McGowan of the Navy. Five minutes after the flag was raised, the island was bombed heavily. Nip shell fire continued. Men near the flagpole lowered the white flag and hoisted the Stars and Stripes again, indicating that every man on the island was ready to fight to the last. However, Colonel Foster ordered the colors struck and the white flag of surrender was hoisted again. We had not fired a shot from the time of surrender at noon. Colonel Hopkins and I burned the colors along with my registered publications.

An hour after the capitulation another bombing run was made on Fort Hughes and two on Corregidor. Colonel Bunker, the Commanding Officer of Corregidor's AA guns was in one of his batteries at Topside. He had not ceased firing. As aircraft came in range, his guns opened up on them. His firing continued until three o'clock while many more bombing runs were made on us. All of the islands were displaying white flags. Corregidor had five of them up, two spread out on top of Malinta Hill. The Nips couldn't help seeing them but still kept up their bombardment. From Fort Hughes, we watched an automobile leave Bottomside and head for Topside. It was General Wainwright and the Japanese Commander going up to stop Colonel Bunker. A quiet settled over the island. The noise of high explosives ceased. Men could be seen in small groups talking in low tones, haggard, hungry, and dead tired, but still willing to fight. Most of them were watching Corregidor, where we could see thousands of Americans being herded down on the beach where the old Ninety Second Garage had been before it was demolished.

To the south we could see Japanese boats around Fort Drum and Fort Frank. As darkness settled down again, ending the historical fight, our soldiers formed into small groups. Some were crying, others just standing or sitting, staring into space, thinking of their homes and loved ones, of their buddies who had died in vain. Most of us, I know, were wondering if ever again in this life we would see those most dear to us, if we would ever know again their loving caresses. Then again our thoughts turned to the Nips, thinking how we would like to exterminate every one from the face of the earth.

Lt. Welch, of the Navy, called me and asked if our radio transmitter were still in working order. It was and we made our way up to the radio shack and transmitted the last message, I believe, that was originated in the forfeited islands, telling of the surrender and also of the Nips bombing and shelling us after we had surrendered. The message was addressed to all U. S. ships and stations.

At 11:45 p.m. a concentration of Japanese landing barges was sighted approaching Fort Hughes, headed for the east end of the island. Colonel Foster passed word over the entire island that no one was to fire a shot at the approaching enemy, that we had surrendered and should not violate our truce. Colonel Foster then directed Lieutenant Colonel Hopkins to proceed with two other officers with a white flag and white lights down the one hundred and sixty-two concrete steps from Craighill across the flat part of the island to the east beach and make the surrender of the island to the Japanese.

Corregidor, Fort Drum and Fort Frank had already surrendered; therefore, Caballao Island, Fort Hughes was the last of the islands in Manila Bay to surrender to the enemy.

While waiting for the return of Colonel Hopkins and the Nips, Colonel Foster called all the officers together in his command post and said that he was sorry we had failed and thanked everyone for putting up a good fight. He believed it would be best for all of us if everyone did as the Japanese said, not to cross them and to carry out their orders as far as was humanly possible. He told us we were on our own and that he would like to see us live up to what a good soldier should be. The Nips entered the command post and Colonel Foster surrendered himself and seven hundred Americans to the Japanese. American hearts filled with sadness while Japanese hearts brimmed over with triumph.

It was midnight when the first Japanese entered Battery Craighill where the command post was. At the time of their entrance Colonel Foster, Lieutenant McCowan, Lieutenant Welch, some telephone men and I were present. Colonel Foster handed his pistol to the Nip Commander. One Nip soldier entered the command post and told us all to stand. Everyone was standing at the time except the men on the telephones. The little yellow monkey kicked the telephone operators when they were slow in standing. Our small arms had been placed on a table at the side of the room. The soldier, seeing this, did not make any further search and after a few minutes told us to sit down.

Colonel Foster, Hopkins and the Japanese commander were outside in the passageway around a mess table. Nip photographers were taking pictures of the surrender. The Nips asked for all maps of the island, showing ammunition storage and gun positions. Colonel Foster was being questioned concerning installations and stores on the island and I was close enough to hear the Colonel's answers. All questions concerning the island he answered readily but when the Nips started asking for information concerning the Army in general the Colonel refused to answer. He told the Nips he knew nothing, that we had been out of radio communication for several days. The Nips threatened to kill the Colonel but he insisted he knew nothing.

Colonel Foster requested the Nip commander to allow the Americans to sleep the remainder of the night and turn in their fire arms the following morning. After some arguing and jabbering the Nips agreed. The word was passed around the island and we settled down for the night.

"MARTIN LUTHER" MOVIE TO BE SHOWN IN ALPINE

This Friday evening, October 20, the historical movie, "Martin Luther," will be shown at Fuller Hall on Marshall Road, Alpine.

The Family Night Dinner of the Alpine Community Church will be served first starting at 7 p.m. The movie will begin about 7:30. Everyone is welcome either to come in time for the potluck or for the movie. Bring a salad, vegetable, or dessert to pass and your own table service.

The movie will be shown again on Sunday evening, 7 p.m. in Fuller Hall.

This movie is being shown in recognition of Reformation Month. The Protestant movement began on October 31, 1517, when Luther nailed his Edit of 95 theses on the door of Wittenburg Cathedral in Germany.

SCHOOL BOOK STORE

El Capitan's Book Store, sponsored by Mr. David Phillips, merchandising teacher, and managed by merchandising students Mike Kiehl and Larry Homan, will have on supply within the next two weeks, pocketbooks for student required or supplementary reading.

These books will be an additional feature to the store which opened September 19 and which has been supplying students with pens, pencils, and paper, before school and during both lunches.

If this new addition shows promise, according to Mr. Phillips, students will be able to special order paperbacks through the store. A ready supply of books on campus would most likely increase the quantity of the student's reading, thus enabling him to achieve a finer education, says Mrs. Jane Austin, English Department head.

BIG IEH HOMES

AS LITTLE AS

$40⁰⁰ per month

NO MONEY DOWN!

100% LOAN ON YOUR LAND!

INSTITUTE PROVIDES NATION'S ONLY COMPLETE BUILDING AND FINANCING SERVICE!

IEH homes are custom built from the ground up by established locally owned building concerns under the supervision of the Institute for Essential Housing. Will build anywhere as desired... from lake side to mountain top. No home site is "impossible" to build on with the IEH plan.

VARIOUS STAGES OF COMPLETION TO FIT YOUR POCKET-BOOK!

Semi-finished stages allow the "do-it-yourselfer" to complete the home during leisure hours and in many cases double and triple the home value. The completely finished stage is less than monthly rent.
